J. J. Wadsworth, / Allen Dulles Due For Yale Visits

Two prominent officials in the Eisenhower administration will visit Yale, announcements yesterday said.

James J. Wadsworth, former U.S. ambassador to the U.N., will arrive Monday to serve as a Hoyt fellow in Silliman College. He will stay two days.

Allen Dulles, former head of the Central Intelligence Agency, will be one of the speaker at a series of programs on "The Challenge of the Crisis State," planned during the spring. Dulles will speak sometime in late March or early April.

The "Challenge" series will culminate in a weekend-long colloquium April 13-15. Other speakers Kenneth E. Boulding, recruited so far include Yale professors Samuel P. Huntington and Kenneth E. Boulding.

Wadsworth plans to attend seminars at Silliman Monday. In the evening he will eat with faculty fellows of the college and then conduct an informal lecture and discussion with students.

On Tuesday, Wadsworth will hold interviews with Silliman students interested in politics and diplomacy.

The Hoyt fellowship provides funds to Yale's residential colleges enabling them to bring prominent public figures to New Haven for informal sessions with students.

Student officials of "Challenge," which is presenting the program in which Dulles is included, have estimated that some 1,500 students from Eastern colleges will attend this year's colloquium.
